

Letter From the Editor

Dear colleagues!

This is the third issue of the Russian Electronic Journal of Radiology for 2021 (Volume 11, No3, 2021).

The epidemiological status in the world and in our country is stabilizing. However, the tense situation persists. We continue the section for articles devoted to the radiology of COVID-associated lung diseases. Materials devoted to the use of visualization methods in the defeat of target organs began to arrive in this category. The journal's portfolio includes several articles on the use of MRI for the diagnosis of neurological disorders in patients who have undergone COVID-19. In the leading clinics of the world, increased attention has been paid to the diagnosis of such disorders. The publication of materials related to this topic will be useful for practical doctors.

And, of course, we continue to publish the most interesting lectures, scientific reviews, original articles and cases from practice. In this issue, are presented to your attention 14 diverse original articles and 7 a case from practice.

As I wrote in an appeal on the journal's website, the number of rejected and sent for revision articles has significantly increased. At the same time, authors often know about the shortcomings and inaccuracies in their articles, but they send "raw", unfinished articles to the journal. Such articles significantly complicate the work of the editorial board, make it necessary to arrange a long correspondence with the authors, conduct repeated reviews and, as a result, lengthen the terms of publication of articles. I kindly ask the authors to adhere to the rules established by the journal for the preparation and submission of articles (<http://www.rejr.ru/avtoram/avtoram.html>).

We are waiting for feedback from readers with questions, wishes and comments.

I wish you all good health and great professional success for the benefit of our patients!

Sincerely,
Chief Editor
Sergey Ternovoy.
