

Letter From the EditorDear Readers!

You have received the first issue of the Russian Electronic Journal of Radiology of 2022 year (REJR, Volume 12, No1, 2022).

The pandemic of the COVID-19 coronavirus infection caused by the SARS-CoV-2 virus has stabilized and we see a decrease in the morbidity rate. In Moscow, the Moscow region and some other regions, the wearing of masks has been canceled! The number of hospitalizations of patients with lung damage is decreasing. At the same time, delayed damage of the target organs only seems to be increasing. We plan to continue the section devoted to the radiological diagnostics of COVID-associated lung changes and the usage of radiology methods for other organs pathology. We are sure that the publication of materials related to this topic will be useful for practitioners.

Of course, we will continue to publish lectures, scientific reviews, original articles and clinical cases. This issue presents to your attention a lecture, two scientific reviews, 6 original articles and 7 clinical cases.

The work of the editorial board of the journal continues in the standard mode. We are preparing a journal from articles that the authors have send us to the mail www.rejr.ru.

However, I have to emphases that the number of insufficiently performed papers is not decreasing. Before sending the article to the journal, I kindly ask the authors to carefully familiarize themselves with the journal's requirements that apply to the submission of the materials (<http://www.rejr.ru/avtoram/avtoram.html>).

As always, we are waiting for the feedback from our readers and authors – reviews, questions and suggestions on the journal's work.

I wish you all health, well-being and great creative success for the benefit of our patients!

Sincerely,
Chief Editor
Sergey Ternovoy.